

TREATIES

Parliament should have the capacity to ratify treaties and also to review ratification.

In ratifying treaties, Family First believes that we should ensure that Australia does not cede any sovereignty.

International co-operation and relationship building, is in principle, a good thing. Australia has a proud record in its history of UN support and involvements.

The Australian Parliament should always be careful to examine the merits of particular treaties with consideration of the benefits and costs to Australian Families. Parliament should also have regard to the benefits and costs to families in the other country or countries.
